Andrew Dunckelman leads the Impact and Insights team at Google.org, Google's philanthropy. There he heads up impact measurement, learning, and thought leadership for Google.org’s global grantmaking work. Previously, he led Google’s economic opportunity and education teams, and created Google’s first cross-company initiative on the future of work.

Before Google, Andrew worked at The Bridgespan Group in Boston, a strategy consultancy for the social sector spun out of Bain & Company. Andrew received a bachelor’s degree from Louisiana State University; an MPA in nonprofit management from Indiana University, where he serves on the Distinguished Alumni Council; and an MBA, with distinction, from Harvard Business School. A native of Houma, Louisiana, Andrew lives in Washington, DC.
