Coaching for Transformation: How Industry-Leading Organizations are Leveraging Coaching for Success

Executive Coaching has the incredible potential to transform leaders, their organizations, and the world around them. As we find ourselves in a time of unprecedented change and competition, it has never been more important to give leaders the right support. In this discussion, we will cover how some of the world’s top organizations are leveraging coaching to:

- Transform culture and leadership
- Advance race and gender equity
- Learn to “ride the waves” of change

Dr. Jonathan Kirschner, Founder and CEO, AIIR Consulting
Paula Fagundes-Ventura, Global Head of Coaching, Goldman Sachs
Stacy Maher, Director of Talent Management, Merck
Kristen Hartley, Learning & Development Manager, Leader and Manager Development, Pinterest

Accelerating the Development of Leaders Who Create the Networks to Move the World Forward

An ambitious business strategy spearheaded by a new purpose-driven culture set the stage for Verizon’s evolution in its executive coaching journey. Transforming to a “2.0” culture presented new opportunities for a pipeline of emerging leaders to quickly advance which fueled Verizon’s push to expand external executive coaching in a programmatic way to those in transitions deeper in the organization.

Discover how Verizon engaged multiple coaching partners to help key talent to reach their full potential and build its pipeline of leaders, accelerate onboarding and acculturate executives, develop a new generation of leaders through digital coaching, and reinforce new ways of working in Verizon 2.0.

Angela Blake, Executive Coaching, Talent Assessments and Capability Building, Verizon

12:20 – 12:30 pm

Integrating Coaching to Fully Leverage Development Investments

The mission of Mayo Clinic is to inspire hope and promote health through integrated practice, education and research. They believe that one of the key levers for continuing to lead and transform healthcare is through the development of its leaders. Mayo has integrated Executive Coaching as a key component to their leadership development work to further drive the impact and outcomes of this investment.

Hear how Mayo embarked on a unique approach to build a collective cohort of physician leaders to further invest in their coaching skills and support peers in accelerating individual and organizational performance.

Karen Mellum, Ph.D., SPHR, Senior Advisor Leader Assessment and Development, Mayo Clinic

1:05 – 1:20 pm

A Personal and Inspiring Story from an Institutional Leader at Mayo Clinic

Dr. Michele Halyard, Vice Dean Mayo Clinic School of Medicine, Dean Arizona Campus, will share a deeply personal story of investing her own personal time in coaching during 2020. She will also share how Covid 19, racial unrest and other disrupters impacted her experience as a coach.

Dr. Michele Y Halyard, M.D. Vice Dean Mayo Clinic School of Medicine, Dean Arizona Campus, Mayo Clinic
Karen Mellum, Ph.D., SPHR, Senior Advisor Leader Assessment and Development, Mayo Clinic

Mentor Connect

Scott Bonneau will share with our audience how Indeed has designed a unique 3-month Mentoring Program.

Indeed believes Mentorship is a two way learning opportunity and everyone has something to teach. A Mentee learns new skills from their Mentor and a Mentor learns new skills as a teacher that can apply to their career as a potential future manager. Learn how this program was designed and delivered with technology to 100 Mentees at Indeed.

Individual Coaching is Not Team Coaching: Why it matters and what to do about it.
The extremely complex problems modern organizations face will only be solved by the collaborative efforts of teams, not individuals. Unfortunately, while organizations continually make significant investments in individual professional development and one-to-one coaching, research shows that only one in five leadership teams is found to be highly effective. While some organizations do support team development, many interventions are often not informed by meaningful data about the team itself integrated with insights derived from decades of peer reviewed research on the performance of real-world teams.

In this session we will explore the shifts that need to be made to intelligently assess and unlock the collective creative potential of teams across an organization in order to be continually future-fit in a world of ever increasing uncertainty.

Gabe Abella, Organizational Coach, JP Morgan Chase

NEW RESEARCH - Current and Post Pandemic World: Where is executive coaching headed?
While executive coaching continues to grow and evolve in organizations, this new research examines current trends and how the chaos of 2020 has impacted the practice of coaching. How has coaching been used to support leaders in a health pandemic, social justice dilemma, and economic crises? What do our leaders need? How will coaching evolve beyond these challenges in the future? Organization examples will be shared during the readout of the research.

Amy Lui Abel, PhD, Vice President, Human Capital, The Conference Board
Matt Dodson, Manager, Organizational Development, Chevron

Moving from Disruption to Transformation
The THRIVE wave was developed by EY’s Americas Coaching Practice to help leaders and teams develop a strategy to navigate the many disruptions of 2020. Hear about this tool which is a springboard into deeper, more specific and unique coaching conversations to determine how to move through three distinct stages of disruption by tapping into what behaviors could enhance agility and help one find clearer pathways towards success.

C-Suite Executive Coaching Priorities: What Matters Now?

Today’s leaders continue to face unparalleled demands and pressures. Business models have changed significantly driven by COVID impacts, accelerated digitalization, and global, economic, and political impacts. Virtual realities challenge leaders in new ways to build executive presence, strengthen critical relationships, build Board relationships, retain and develop top talent including succession planning, keep teams motivated, and well, simply lead effectively.

Now more than ever, senior executives must be resilient and flexible, while acting with speed, clarity, and transparency to deliver success regardless of the challenges they face.

The executive panel will discuss what’s new, what’s different, and what matters most at the top of the house in supporting leaders as they navigate a future of continued complexity and uncertainty.

Building an Internal Executive Coaching Capability at Prudential that Drives Ongoing Talent Development

Prudential Financial is in the midst of a broad transformation, which includes how they develop their high potential executive talent. Francine will share why Prudential views executive coaching as an important business capability. She will also share the steps the firm has taken to build an internal team of Talent Partners who will anchor the executive coaching model and provide ongoing coaching (vs. discreet engagements).

Prudential believes these changes will align myriad stakeholders to a common coaching framework and make it easier to share information across HR business partners, talent partners, executive development programs, and managers, all in the service of accelerating talent development and creating a deep bench of succession-ready leaders.

Francine Chew, VP People Development Capabilities, Prudential

1:55 – 2:15 pm

Is Internal Coach Certification a Trojan Horse - Changing A Leaders Way of Being in Times of Existential Crisis?

As the world faces new existential crisis such as the recent COVID19 pandemic, leaders have been tested and historical concepts of what constitutes leadership have been exposed, highlighting the need for leadership to evolve. In a systemically dynamic and complex work, leaders have been called forth into more distributed, collaborative, regenerative and conscious forms of leadership, focused more on a "transpersonal way of being" and no longer an individualistic, siloed "hero".

The Medtronic Internal Coach Certification is an award winning and established two-year program which develops skills of advanced coaching and new capability in leaders. It has been shown to create a ripple and multiplying impact, returning investment across the organization by supporting individual leaders in change, evolving organizational culture, leadership approaches and organizational performance.

New research focused on exploring the sustained influence of coach training upon coaches themselves.

This session will explore the findings, considering the nature of the influence coach training has on the personal and professional lives of coaches and the influence the training also has upon leadership.

Simon Dawson, PCC CPCC, Consultant Executive Coach, Coaching Global Centre of Excellence, Medtronic

Karen Mathre, Director, Learning and Leadership Development / Sr. Program Manager, Coaching Center of Expertise, Medtronic
In an ever-changing world of technology, rapid change and new consumer habits, Coaching has emerged as the equalizer for women leaders. In this session we’ll discuss how coaching can help women leaders emerge as stronger business leaders to have greater impact.

Jennifer Paylor, Head of Learning and Development, Cap Gemini

In this fireside chat with Sally Helgesen we’ll explore how coaching has changed in a virtual environment, looking at the upsides and any disadvantages. We will also explore the critical topic of why women in particular can benefit from coaching and look at how specific challenges can be addressed through coaching.
